Athens - Experiencing And Enjoying The Beauty Of Ancient Greece

Certainly not many cities can hold the title of being one of the oldest cities in the world, but Athens is one of them. With 3500 years under its belt, Athens is a city with ties to some of the greatest accomplishments of mankind. For example, it was the home of Plato and Aristotle. It's been called the "birthplace of Western civilization," and features some of the most monumental and famous buildings on Earth. These things, combined with the new modern city atmosphere, make Athens a city that has no match, and if you are thinking of visiting, you will need to start by getting a passport for everyone in your group. Start by going online and looking into expedited child passports and adult passports.

Americans Will Need A Passport

With online passport services, you never have to wait in line at a post office or passport office ever again. Instead, you can log in online, choose your service, pick a delivery date, and get your passport in the shortest amount of time possible. Any service you might need is available, including replacements for stolen passports and more.

Acropolis

One very important Greek site is the Acropolis, a cluster of ancient ruins located on a hilltop. As an officially declared UNESCO World Heritage Site, it contains many important ruins, including the Theater of Dionysis, the Erechtheum, and the Parthenon, one of the most recognizable buildings in the world and a temple dedicated to the goddess and patron of the city, Athena. Standing as a symbol of Greek success and grandeur, the Parthenon is famous for its famous sculptures and architecture, as well as its proportions. Because the entire Acropolis sits high on a hill overlooking the city, it also provides some of the best views of Athens.

Agora

Don't miss out on visiting the Agora as well, a complex that used to serve as a central market place. In addition to being an important commercial center, it was a cultural and political hub. The Agora itself houses many important landmarks as well as an interesting museum. One is the impressive Temple of Hephaestus, a temple that is amazingly well-preserved. This is just one of the landmarks, and it takes hours to explore the entirety of the Agora.

National Archaeological Museum

Archaeology lives and breathes in Athens, and it's not hard to see why. If you are interested in learning more of Athens' ancient residents, head to the National Archaeological Museum, where exhibits span from prehistoric eras to more modern classical Athens. It's actually considered to be one of the top museums on Earth, and is filled to the brim with artifacts. Some of these include objects from Troy, the famous golden mask of Agamemnon, the strange Antikythera mechanism, classical statues, precious gems and jewels, and even some mummies from Egypt.

Parnitha National Park

Parnitha National Park is an exceptional getaway for those looking to take in some fresh air and unwind after a day of adventuring. There are plenty of marked pathways to take a little hike, as well as interesting gorges, caves, and springs. The National Garden of Athens provides a similar relaxing experience.
