

Published based on Florida VS Vegas

Florida VS Vegas

With America being so vast, so are the options for taking holidays there. This is an issue me and my family are struggling with currently. We've never been to the US before and because it is so unlikely that the opportunity (read as: money) to go again will arise again anytime soon, we haven't fully decided where to go.

The votes of my youngest 2 girls go to Florida holidays. Unsurprisingly, Disney World Resort is a big attraction for them and I have to admit that the magic of Walt and Hollywood Studios is drawing me in too! With 4 theme parks crammed full of rides and attractions within the resort, there seems like there is much to explore and even if we grow tired of the resort there are stretches of beautiful, clear beach for us to investigate and relax on. Not to mention the fantastic weather!

My husband and eldest son on the other hand, really have their hearts set on Las Vegas holidays. I feel this option is far less child-friendly and that the two men will get bored very quickly since I will not giving them free reign to gamble and binge drink! I do not completely dislike the idea of Vegas since seeing a show like 'O' and also the water fountains displays outside the Bellagio Hotel sounds nice and I wouldn't mind checking out a few of the rollercoasters that the city is famed for but with young children in toe I really just can't see how it could be practical.

Hmmm. I think it is clear already which of the two USA holidays we will be taking! But as the mother of the household (and therefore organiser, suitcase packer, passport-carrying checker), I think I am more than entitled to have the final decision.

You can also find this article published on Florida VS Vegas, and on the tag pages binge drink, disney world resort, issue, opportunity, Unsurprisingly, water fountains.