Mexico City - Historic Societal History Inside Of A Town Setting

The capital of Mexico is Mexico City, and it features a little bit for any vacationer: ancient archaeological areas, a vibrant cultural background, a fascinating historical record, an exciting city feel, interesting markets, and tons of opportunities to do something fun. This city is built on what used to be Tenochtitlan, the capital city of the Aztec empire. This means that people have been living here for a very long time, which means it's not surprising that it has evolved into one of the most populated cities in the world, with about 20 million people living there. It makes for a great vacation destination, but your family will need passports or pass port cards before you can cross the border.

All a passport card is, is an alternative to the passport book with some benefits and with some drawbacks. A passport card resembles the other cards in your wallet, and it only costs about $45, much cheaper than the standard passport. In order to use it, you can only be traveling to Mexico, Canada, Bermuda, or the Caribbean, and it can only be by boat or car. All plan travel requires a passport. If you think this is the best option for you, go online and check out online passport service. From these sites, you can get your first passport, replace a pasport lost, get a replacement passport, and any other passport service you might need.

You will find that historical landmarks are scattered all throughout the city, and this makes it fun to just explore. One very important spot is Plaza de la Constitución, also known by locals as Zocalo. This huge square is the second largest in the world, right behind the famous Red Square in Moscow. In the square are several must-see landmarks, including the National Palace, the City Hall, and the Cathedral. This Cathedral is the largest in the Americas, and if you go inside, you will see an altar made completely out of gold. The Basílica de Guadalupe, located outside the Plaza, is known as the holiest Catholic place in the Americas.

The Templo Mayor is easily the most historically and culturally important landmark in the city. This was once the central hub of the Aztec empire, and many very important ceremonies and religious rites took place on the Templo Mayor. Excavated only recently, archaeologists are constantly digging up new and interesting artifacts that give us a glimpse into the life of the Aztecs. The Templo Mayor is a huge component of Mexican history. Teotihuacan is an ancient city that the Aztecs called The City of the Gods. Now it is a very important archaeological site, especially because it is where the Pyramid of the Sun, the largest pyramid by volume in the world, is located.

Another interesting area to visit is the Chapultepec Park and Zoo. In this area, you will also find the Museum of Anthropology, which contains a very extensive collection of artifacts, and a few other museums and attractions. The Palacio de Bellas Artes is a gorgeous theatre with world-famous murals on the walls. Concerts and other performing arts happen here, making it a great way to spend an evening.

No matter what sort of experience you are looking to have in Mexico City, you will be able to do it. Just don't forget your family's passport cards. Also remember that you can get passport service online if you are in need of a new passport, if your U S online passport lost, and much more.
