Unique Amusement Parks - Prepare The Next Large Trip

People love theme parks. They often reflect our interests as a society and play a big part on our vacations, whether we need a week full of theme park fun or a quick one-day getaway to celebrate the beginning of summer. Some parks are educational, while others cater to the imagination. Some are low-key and relaxed, while others feature heart-attack inducing roller coasters and rides aiming to get as much adrenaline in your system as possible. However, our world has some very strange theme parks, some that seem to defy logic or explanation all together.

One of the most well-known weird theme parks is Bon Bon Land, a theme park in Denmark. Here, you will find an entire park dedicated to pooping, barfing, and sexually suggestive cartoon animals. For example, Hundeputterutchebane, which translates into Dog Fart Coaster features a dog named Henry the Hound. The poor dog seems pretty mortified by his uncontrollable flatulence, right before you get to experience the namesake of the ride right at the end. Vomiting rats, cows with human breasts, and urinating barn animals are everywhere. Traveling to this park requires a passport, however. If you need one in a hurry, you can get your child U.S. passport online.

With online passport service, getting a passport is incredibly easy. These sites essentially work as online passport offices, so there are no lines, no closed signs, and no cranky clerks. An easy-to-complete application is available for whatever sort of passport service you might need, and it all gets delivered by the date you choose. USA Passport expedite services are also available, meaning you can get passports for the entire family, and delivery options are just as diverse, with an option to get your passport in just one business day, if you so choose.

Another strange theme park is Dickens World, located in Kent, England, is a theme park inspired by the stories of 19th-century England by Charles Dickens, author of Oliver Twist and Bleak House. In this theme park, you will come across beggars, diseased people, decrepit buildings, dirty, dark streets, and a generally gloomy atmosphere. Despite the at first unpleasant sounding setting, there are some interesting attractions: Ebenezer Scrooge's haunted house, an authentic-looking Victorian schoolhouse, a dark boat ride through the sewers, and live-action performances.

One weird theme park you might have heard of is Loveland in South Korea. Its infamous reputation makes it one of the strangest theme parks in the world. This whole park is the size of two soccer fields, and it contains 140 statues and sculptures representing sexually explicit acts. Everything is there to see - nothing is left to the imagination - which fills its primary purpose: to show newlyweds the ropes, so to speak.

If you look hard enough, you are sure to come across some wacky theme parks, and not only in other countries. There is no shortage of weird theme parks in the US as well. If you are in the process of trying to plan a vacation for the near future, browse around online and see what sort of theme parks (especially wacky ones) that you can find. Also don't forget to check out child U.S. passport service websites. You can get passport expedite service and adult passport service on these sites so that your entire family is ready for the trip.
